

Citizen Science Working Group

Description: A group to promote understanding of the role and benefits of Citizen Science in USGS research.

Point Of Contact: Sophia Liu, sophialiu@usgs.gov

THE CITIZEN SCIENCE WORKING GROUP IS NOT MEETING, NOR IS IT ENGAGING IN FORMAL PROJECT OR OTHER COLLECTIVE ACTIVITIES AT THIS TIME. HOWEVER, WE STRONGLY ENCOURAGE MEMBERS TO CONTINUE TO SHARE RELEVANT INFORMATION VIA THE GROUP EMAIL LIST:

Citizen Science, USGS Research, and the Citizen Science Working Group

'Citizen science' refers to scientific observation, measurement, research, and related activities conducted, in whole or in part, by amateur or nonprofessional scientists and other citizen volunteers (modified from Wikipedia, 04-15-2013).

Citizen science complements and enhances more conventional scientific methods and studies. The role of citizen science in the realm of the natural sciences is particularly valuable. Governments and other institutions often do not have the resources to generate the baseline and on-going observation and monitoring data required to address complex environmental issues because ecological monitoring is expensive, labor intensive, and time consuming. (Modified from Lee, T., et al. 2006.)

The purpose of CDI Citizen Science Working Group (CSWG) is to:

- promote an understanding of the role and potential benefits of Citizen Science and Scientists in the conduct of USGS research;
- facilitate and enhance connections between the USGS and the larger federal and public Citizen Science communities;
- provide access to information and tools to support the proper, effective, and creative use of Citizen Science data within the USGS;
- engage the public in USGS and partner science; and
- foster and improve the public's scientific literacy.

Become a Member

 The CDI Citizen Science Working Group (CSWG) welcomes the participation of anyone interested in Citizen Science and its role in USGS research. If you wish join the group, please email cdi@usgs.gov.

After you have joined, please add your name and other information to our Citizen Science Working Group Member Roster

An email list has been set up for this team. If you wish to send an email to the group, please use:
